2. Theme, modalities of grants, values and vacancies

2.1 Theme: State and society in the contemporaneous world: global contemporaneity: dynamics of inequality and development

State and society are threatened by global risks resulting from a variety of processes and relationships, presented in 3 thematic blocks as follows: a. DEMOCRACY, INEQUALITIES AND DEPRIVATION OF RIGHTS; HUMAN RIGHTS AND INEQUALITIES; SOCIAL STRUGGLES, WOMEN'S MOVEMENTS AND CONFRONTATION OF INEQUALITIES; PERIPHERAL CAPITALIST DEVELOPMENT: Impacts and social, political and environmental conflicts; WORK AND MIGRATION; HOUSING AND MIGRATION: Quality of life of populations. At present, sociopolitical responses that have been presented as an alternative to economic growth, to the reduction of inequalities and to the social consequences on the world population, particularly those in dependent and peripheral capitalist countries, have proved insufficient and not much different from the extant precarious conditions of life and work of these populations. The relationship between development and inequalities will be approached from an analysis of the suppression of rights and contemporary struggles. b. SOCIAL INEQUALITY IN BRAZIL INTERPRETED IN THE LIGHT OF THE THEORY OF PIERRE BOURDIEU; GLOBALIZATION OF AGRICULTURE AND SOCIAL INEQUALITIES; GLOBALIZATION AND CULTURAL SUPERDIVERSITY Globalization, understood as a worldwide process of economic, socio-political, spatial and cultural integration, has generated forms of unequal development in countries of peripheral capitalism: whether at the level of land concentration and the inequalities this generates, or in the distribution and consumption of cultural capital, or in the forms of intellectual production in spaces of power and domination. These dimensions will be analyzed in the light of the new international division of labor; from a theoretical perspective that is key for the discussion of current cultural capital and the relationship between superdiversity and global cultural processes. C. CORRUPTION AND POLITICS The phenomenon of corruption is seen as a practice that affects the functioning of politics, of representation, with consequences for the quality of public policies and international relations. The purpose of this theme is to develop ways of measuring corruption, building reliable indicators and databases and to identify the causes of corruption and its effects on political behavior, public policy and international relations.
